EARLS OF DERBY GOLF HERITAGE

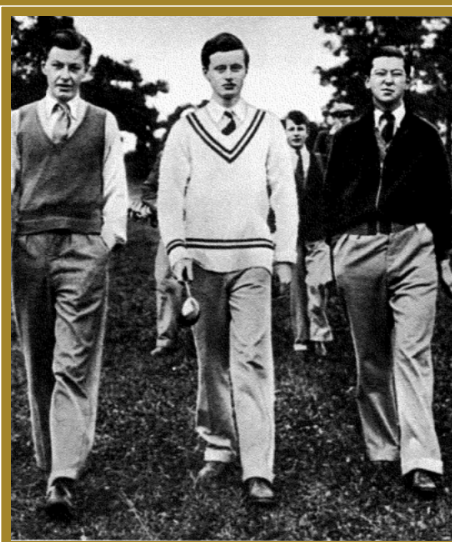

The Earls of Derby have strong connections with golf. The 19th Earl of Derby is Vice President of the PGA and President of Formby Golf Club and Royal Lytham & St Annes Golf Club.

The 18th Earl of Derby served as President of the PGA. He was instrumental in changing the Ryder Cup in 1979 to include European Players following discussions with Jack Nicklaus to make the matches more competitive, as the Americans almost always won. Following his death in 1994 he was recognised as President in Memoriam of the PGA in recognition of his work for British Golf.

The 17th Earl of Derby set up Swinley Forest Golf Club. Located near Ascot, it is one of England's most exclusive golf clubs. Legend has it that Lord Derby was late for an audience with the Queen, due to slow play at Sunningdale Golf Club. She remarked that he was late for lunch and that a man of his stature ought to have his own course, so he gave part of the land and secured a Crown Estate lease for Swinley Forest Golf Club and commissioned Harry Colt to design it.
